

Travis J. Lybbert

Travis J. Lybbert is a Professor at the University of California, Davis in the Agricultural & Resource Economics Department – has published research on topics in applied microeconomic ranging from poverty dynamics, climate change and childhood nutrition to agricultural technology adoption, intellectual property and innovation policy. Collaborating with researchers, students, NGOs, governments, and private firms, he has lived and worked in India, Haiti, and throughout Sub-Saharan Africa, North Africa and Europe. He has spent time as a visiting researcher in the Intellectual Property Division of the World Trade Organization, in the Economics and Statistics Division of the World Intellectual Property Organization, and in universities in Ghana, Germany and Sweden. He is an Affiliate of the Center for Effective Global Action at UC Berkeley. He was a Fulbright Scholar in Morocco before earning his Ph.D. (2004) in Applied Economics from Cornell University.